READING

Jean Piaget

(1) _____

A hundred years ago in Paris, Jean Piaget began to rethink the way that young children learn. He had a job checking IQ tests that had been designed to work out how intelligent a child was, and he noticed that children of the same age tended to make the same mistakes. Showing remarkable understanding, he realized that the children weren't making mistakes because they lacked intelligence, but because they lacked the life experience to get the answers right.

(2) _____

In the 1920s, most educators believed that all they had to do was "teach" children things. They did not consider that children had to slowly and gradually learn how to see the world before they could understand what they were being taught. In contrast, Piaget was well ahead of his time in understanding that young children were going through different stages of development. Piaget saw that children could only learn when they were ready to learn.

(3) _____

According to Piaget, the way a child's mind grows can be divided into several stages. In the first two years of life, children use their senses to learn based on experiences. After that, they are able to use language, imagination and abstract thinking to progress quickly. By the age of seven, they tend to ask a lot of How? and Why? questions about the world. It is not until children are about eleven that they start to solve many, more difficult problems.

(4) _____

Piaget's ideas revolutionized the way people educate children. Today, there is more focus on showing children how to learn, and on getting children to do learning activities when they are ready to do them. Educators now know that they have to set tasks for children depending on the level of a child's development.

(5) _____

In the century since Piaget came up with his theories, ideas about how to educate children have changed further, and some of his thinking has been criticized. Many experts believe he was wrong about the abilities of young children to solve problems, for example. However, the influence of his ideas on education is significant. He is rightly considered to be one of the most important figures in the history of education.

13 Read the article. Match the question headings (A–G) to their paragraphs (1–5). Write the correct letter. There are two extra headings.

- A To what extent are Piaget’s ideas now considered out-of-date?
- B Why did Jean Piaget find it so difficult to get people in power to understand his ideas about education?
- C What experience was important in getting Jean Piaget to start thinking about how children learn?
- D Piaget’s theories are still important in education today. What examples of good practice based on Piaget’s thinking can be seen in modern classrooms?
- E Piaget revolutionized people’s thinking about the mental development of children. What exactly are the levels of development?
- F How did Piaget’s own experiences as a teacher influence his ideas and thinking?
- G In what ways were Piaget’s ideas about learning different from ideas that were popular in his own lifetime?

- 1 _____
- 2 _____
- 3 _____
- 4 _____
- 5 _____

14 Read the article. Are the writer’s views about the events and achievements of Piaget’s life Positive, Negative, or Neutral?

- 1 A hundred years ago, in Paris, Jean Piaget began to rethink the way that young children learn.
a. Positive b. Negative c. Neutral
- 2 Showing remarkable understanding, he realized that the children weren’t making mistakes because they lacked intelligence.
a. Positive b. Negative c. Neutral
- 3 In contrast, Piaget was well ahead of his time in understanding that young children were going through different stages of development.
a. Negative b. Neutral c. Positive
- 4 Piaget's ideas revolutionized the way people educate children.
