READING Kylie the dolphin

(1) Scotland's west coast is home to thousands of harbor porpoises—and one special dolphin named Kylie. Kylie hasn't been observed with other common dolphins for at least fifteen years, but she's far from alone, or lonely. She spends her days with the porpoises, cousins that are similar to dolphins, but only about two-thirds their size.

Recently, scientists started to wonder whether Kylie was more than just hanging out with porpoises. They asked themselves whether Kylie was actually communicating with them. While a common dolphin uses a wide range of clicks, whistles, and calls to communicate, porpoises use only a limited number of clicks. In other words, they speak a different language. In their research, scientists discovered that Kylie had learned to "talk" like a porpoise. She never whistled or called—she just clicked—and she was clearly trying to use clicks in the way the porpoises did.

(2) It is difficult not to be amazed by the findings. It is the first time this behavior has been observed in a dolphin, and it suggests that she may be communicating with the porpoises, or at least attempting to. Experts observed that the exchanges between Kylie and the porpoises had the rhythm of a "conversation" between members of the same species. They noticed that the dolphin and porpoises were turn-taking with few interruptions. It was an important discovery—(3) one that must have excited all the scientists involved. Many of them had spent years studying dolphins, and it is rare to make such a breakthrough. It's worth saying, however, that it's unclear how much meaningful information is communicated in Kylie's attempts at porpoise clicks.

It would also seem to be true that Kylie thinks of herself as a porpoise. Scientists used a hydrophone—a machine that records sounds underwater—and discovered that even when alone, away from porpoises, Kylie clicked but never whistled. Even when on her own, she "talks" like a porpoise.

One mystery is why Kylie has ended up alone in the first place. She may have been separated from her group by storms or human activity, or may have lost her parents. (4) Another research study found that some dolphins prefer a solitary life. (5) It is nice to think that some dolphins like privacy, just like humans. Whatever the truth, Kylie is among friends now, and not just porpoise friends. She has become a celebrity in Scotland and has appeared in all the newspapers.

12 Read the magazine article. Choose the best answer.

- 1 What does the writer say about harbor porpoises?
 - a. It is common to see them swimming with dolphins.
 - b. Many of them live off the west coast of Scotland.
 - c. They are similar in size and appearance to dolphins.
 - d. They have been regularly seen off the Scottish coast for about fifteen years.
- 2 When they first carried out research, what did scientists want to discover about Kylie?
 - a. why she was spending so much time with harbor porpoises
 - b. how she managed to make clicks and whistles to communicate
 - c. whether she was able to "talk" to porpoises in some way
 - d. how similar dolphins and porpoises were in their behavior
- 3 What did the research studies into Kylie actually discover?
 - a. she had changed how she naturally made sounds
 - b. dolphins and porpoises use similar clicks and whistles
 - c. she could communicate really well with porpoises
 - d. she found it hard to take turns when "talking" to porpoises
- 4 According to the text, why is Kylie on her own?
 - a. It's common for dolphins to live alone, so that's a likely reason.
 - b. It's highly likely that bad weather or human activity is to blame.
 - c. Kylie probably lost her family group by accident.
 - d. There are a number of possible reasons and probably, we'll never know for sure.
- 5 From the article, what can you infer about the writer's point of view?
 - a. The writer is fascinated by the recent discoveries.
 - b. The writer thinks the story should have more publicity.
 - c. The writer thinks this is a sad and tragic story.
 - d. The writer thinks the research was carried out amazingly well.
