The importance of wetlands

1

Very. Wetlands are a unique mix of land and water, and they play an important role in providing homes for wildlife, providing fresh water, and fighting climate change.

2

They cover six percent of the Earth's surface, and you can find them on every continent except Antarctica.

3

It depends. Some of them are always there and have been around as long as humans. Others are temporary, which means they only appear after a lot of rain.

4

Around a billion people use wetlands for fishing, farming, and tourism. And it's not just people. Many species of animals live there, and birds use them as a place to stop and "refuel" during long journeys.

5

Wetlands take in billions of tons of carbon from the air. When people destroy them (to build houses, for example), this carbon is released into the air again. This is why it's vitally important to protect them.

14 Read the fact file. Choose the best answer.
