INSTRUCTIONS

- 01 This test contains 30 multiple-choice questions, numbered 01 to 30. Each question has four options, marked (A), (B), (C) and (D), of which only one is correct.
- 02 The test is divided into four parts. Parts I and II contain questions linked to a source text; read the whole text before answering them. Parts III and IV contain questions that are independent of one another.
- 03 The source texts are line-numbered in the left margin. Use the numbering to locate the extracts quoted in the questions.
- 04 The suggested time is 60 minutes. Dictionaries, notes and electronic devices are not allowed.
- 05 Transfer your answers to the answer sheet on the last page, filling in the box that matches your chosen option. Questions with more than one mark, or with no mark, will be counted as incorrect.
- 06 Before you start, check that your booklet is complete and legible. Report any problem to the teacher in charge.

PART I · QUESTIONS 01 TO 06

Read Text I and answer the questions that follow.

READING · SOURCE TEXT*The trouble with learning from mistakes

Why the brain protects us from the lesson we most need

First and foremost, we should admit something uncomfortable: most of us are terrible at learning from our mistakes. Psychologists have studied this tendency for decades, and their findings are remarkably consistent. When 5 an experiment fails, when a project collapses, when a friendship ends badly, the human brain rarely responds by asking what went wrong. It responds by protecting itself.

Dr. Amara Osei, a sociologist who has been researching failure since 2011, calls this "burying your head in the 10 sand." Her participants were asked to describe a recent professional mistake. Almost all of them acknowledged that the mistake had happened, but only a third could explain what they would do differently. The rest blamed circumstances, colleagues, or bad luck.

15 This is not a fact of life we are stuck with. Osei argues that people who are genuinely driven improve because they have built one specific habit: they write down what happened before their memory of it softens. It sounds simple. It is easier said than done. By the time most of us
20 get around to reflecting on a failure, the story has already been rewritten in our favor.

Interestingly, the research has come full circle. Osei's newest work suggests that the same protective instinct that stops us learning also stops us from being paralyzed by 25 shame. The mechanism that undermines our growth may be the one that keeps us functioning.

Fictional text, written by the EIC Creative Department from the Unit 1 theme of Life 6. The researcher and the figures quoted are fictional, created for assessment purposes.

QUESTION 01 What is the main purpose of Text I?

- (A) To teach a memorization technique to students preparing for exams.
- (B) To criticize psychologists who study human behavior without evidence.
- (C) To compare the professional performance of optimists and pessimists.
- (D) To explain why we rarely learn from our mistakes and what research suggests.

QUESTION 02 In the second paragraph, the expression burying your head in the sand describes the behavior of someone who:

- (A) admits the mistake in public and apologizes to the people involved.
- (B) refuses to face something unpleasant, pretending it does not exist.
- (C) studies their own mistake in detail until they understand its cause.
- (D) blames themselves for everything that ends up going wrong in life.

QUESTION 03 In the third paragraph, It is easier said than done indicates that the habit described by Osei is:

- (A) simple to understand, but difficult to put into practice.
- (B) impossible to learn after a certain age in adulthood.
- (C) effective only when it is written down by someone else.
- (D) too expensive for most people to be able to adopt it.

QUESTION 04 The finding that only a third could explain what they would do differently suggests that most participants:

- (A) could not remember any recent professional mistake at all.
- (B) acknowledged the mistake but did not turn it into learning.
- (C) deliberately lied to the researcher about what had happened.
- (D) blamed their own lack of preparation for the whole situation.

QUESTION 05 In a sociologist who has been researching failure since 2011, the verb form was chosen because it:

- (A) stresses the finished result of research that ended back in 2011.
- (B) describes a research habit that is repeated every year since 2011.
- (C) stresses the duration of a process begun in the past and still going.
- (D) describes an action happening right now and ending straight after.

QUESTION 06 In Her participants were asked to describe a recent professional mistake, the agent is left out because:

- (A) it is obvious from context and naming it would add nothing.
- (B) the sentence is in the past continuous, which takes no agent.
- (C) the verb ask never accepts the structure with by at all.
- (D) the agent is unknown, which leaves the sentence incomplete.

31 Kimiko started diving in 1974 and still dives today. Write two
4 pt sentences about her: one saying how long she has dived, one saying how many times she has dived this winter.

PART II · QUESTIONS 07 TO 12

Read Text II and answer the questions that follow.

READING · SOURCE TEXT*The last of the Ama

Two thousand years of diving, and one generation left

For more than two thousand years, the Ama divers of Japan have been slipping into the cold water off the Pacific coast without oxygen tanks, holding their breath for up to two minutes at a time. They come back up with abalone,
5 seaweed and, in earlier centuries, pearls. Almost all of them are women.

Today fewer than two thousand Ama are still working, and the average age is close to seventy. Kimiko Nakamura started diving at nineteen. "It took me a whole season to 10 find my feet," she says. "After that, it became second nature."

The work has never been safe. Ama learn to read the current, the temperature and their own bodies, and they are taught never to cut corners. A diver who ignores the signs
15 and stays down for a few extra seconds may not come back up. "We always err on the side of caution," Nakamura says. "You can replace an abalone. You cannot replace a person."

What is disappearing is more than a livelihood. It is a body of knowledge that was never written down. By 2040,
20 researchers estimate, the tradition will have vanished from most of the coastline. Nakamura's daughter did not follow in her mother's footsteps; she moved to Osaka at twenty-two and works in logistics.

"She got out of it," Nakamura says, and then laughs. "I do
25 not blame her. This job is not all fun and games."

Text written by the EIC Creative Department from the Unit 2 theme of Life 6. The Ama and the practice of free diving are real; the diver quoted is a fictional character.

QUESTION 07 Text II is organized mainly around the idea that the Ama tradition:

- (A) has started growing again as young Japanese women take it up.
- (B) was always a male activity that only recently accepted women.
- (C) was banned by the Japanese government for safety reasons at sea.
- (D) is disappearing, taking with it knowledge never written down.

QUESTION 08 In It took me a whole season to find my feet, Nakamura means that it took a whole season to:

- (A) learn how to swim in open water without any help at all.
- (B) get used to the new situation and feel comfortable in it.
- (C) manage to buy her own diving equipment and wetsuit set.
- (D) be accepted by the older divers already in her own group.

QUESTION 09 In the third paragraph, they are taught never to cut corners means that the Ama learn never to:

- (A) dive alone in the open sea, far away from the coastline.
- (B) disagree with the older divers working in their own group.
- (C) skip steps in the procedure in order to save a little time.
- (D) carry more equipment with them than would really be needed.

QUESTION 10 The line You can replace an abalone. You cannot replace a person. works in the text as:

- (A) a technical note on the current market value of abalone in Japan.
- (B) a piece of dramatic language that uses sharp contrast for emphasis.
- (C) a criticism of the heavy consumption of seafood on the Japanese coast.
- (D) an explanation of why free diving is banned in certain coastal areas.

QUESTION 11 In By 2040, the tradition will have vanished from most of the coastline, the verb form expresses:

- (A) an action in progress at the moment when the text was written.
- (B) an action that began in the past and continues to this day.
- (C) a prediction with no set deadline, the same as will vanish.
- (D) an action that will be complete before a point in the future.

QUESTION 12 Which of the following extracts from Text II is in the passive voice?

- (A) Ama learn to read the current, the temperature and their own bodies.
- (B) A diver who ignores the signs and stays down for a few extra seconds may not come back up.
- (C) It is a body of knowledge that was never written down.
- (D) Nakamura's daughter did not follow in her mother's footsteps.

33 Rewrite the sentences in the passive voice. Leave out the agent when it adds nothing.
3 pt

- a) Someone asked the divers to describe a dangerous moment.
- b) The community has taught these rules to every new diver since the 1950s.
