

Starting Over Addendum

Dois detalhes que surgiram em aula: quem realmente faz a ação do gerúndio depois de preposição, e como negar essa ação sem quebrar a estrutura.

1 De Quem É Esse -ing?

Marina liga pra mãe no domingo à noite, como sempre faz desde que se mudou.

Marina: Mom, I finally found an apartment near downtown. It's small, but it's perfect.

Mãe: That's wonderful, honey. But will you be safe walking home at night?

Marina: I'll be fine, Mom. It's a quiet neighborhood, and I always take a cab after dark.

Mãe: I know, I know. Your aunt asked about you yesterday. I told her I was worried about her going alone.

Marina: Mom, I promise I'm being careful.

Mãe: I believe you. Actually, Jonah called me last week, did you know that?

Marina: Wait, Jonah called you?

Mãe: He did. He said he was impressed by you handling that big presentation so calmly.

Marina: He really said that?

Mãe: He did. Honestly, I'm still not used to you sounding so confident about work. You used to hate presentations.

Marina: I guess Vancouver changed that.

Mãe: I'm just happy about you finally settling in. That's all I wanted to hear.

Repare: a mãe usa a mesma estrutura várias vezes — "worried about her going", "impressed by you handling", "not used to you sounding", "happy about you finally settling". O que essas frases têm em comum? Por que sempre aparece uma pessoa (her / you) bem antes do gerúndio? Tenta explicar com suas palavras antes de ler a regra.

Quem está indo sozinha nessa frase? Não é a mãe, é a Marina. Sempre que quem faz a ação do -ing é diferente do sujeito da frase, você precisa nomear essa pessoa, bem antes do gerúndio.

Duas opções funcionam: um possessivo (mais formal, mais comum na escrita) ou um pronome objeto (mais comum na fala). Falantes nativos misturam as duas o tempo todo, e as duas estão certas.

I my / me

YOU your / you

HE his / him

SHE her / her

IT its / it

WE our / us

THEY their / them

UM NOME Marina's / Marina

MAIS FORMAL / ESCRITA

Jonah didn't mind Marina's asking so many questions.

MAIS NATURAL / FALA

Jonah didn't mind Marina asking so many questions.

ADENDO

Deixando o Gerúndio Negativo

Priya encontra a Marina no corredor, um dia depois da entrevista de acompanhamento pra promoção.

Priya: Hey, so? How did the interview go yesterday?

Marina: Honestly? I've been a mess all morning.

Priya: Why, are you afraid of losing the job? I thought it went well.

Marina: No, that's not it. The job is basically mine already, they made that clear.

Priya: Then what's the problem?

Marina: I'm afraid of not getting the promotion. There's a difference.

Priya: Oh, I get it. Honestly, I was worried about not being considered too, when I first got here.

Marina: Really? You never told me that.

Priya: I was embarrassed about not speaking up more in my first few months. I thought about not saying anything in meetings at all, just to stay safe.

Marina: That sounds exhausting.

Priya: It was. But I got tired of not being heard, so I just started talking.

Marina: I'm proud of you for that.

Priya: And I'm confident about you not messing this up either. You've got this.

Repare como a Priya usa a mesma estrutura várias vezes — "worried about not being considered", "embarrassed about not speaking up", "tired of not being heard", "confident about you not messing this up". Em cada uma, onde exatamente fica o "not"? Tenta perceber o padrão antes de ler a regra.

Para negar a ação, coloque o not bem na frente do gerúndio, não lá atrás perto da preposição. Colocar o "not" no lugar errado muda o sentido inteiro da frase.

SENTIDO ERRADO

She isn't worried about getting the job.

O QUE VOCÊ REALMENTE QUER DIZER

She's worried about not getting the job.

E sim, dá pra combinar as duas regras na mesma frase: nomeia quem está fazendo, depois nega.

Marina was afraid of him not calling back after the interview.
