The Girl Who Cycled Across South America

When she was sixteen, Camila decided she wanted to see more of the world than her small hometown. She had never traveled outside her country before, but she had always been curious about the mountains she could see from her window. Last year, with her parents' permission, she planned a cycling trip along the Andes.

The journey wasn't easy. Some days, the roads were so steep that she had to push her bike instead of riding it. She has now cycled over 2,000 kilometers, and she says the hardest part wasn't her legs — it was learning to trust strangers who offered her food and a place to sleep.

If she hadn't kept a video diary, she probably wouldn't have remembered so many small details. She's already been invited to speak at her old school, and she's planning a second trip for next year, this time through Central America.

"People often ask if I was scared," she says. "I was. But I think you can be scared and still do something."

1. Why did Camila want to travel?

- (A) She was bored at school.
- (B) Her parents suggested it.
- (C) She had always been curious about the mountains.
- (D) She wanted to make a video.

2. What was the hardest part of the trip, according to Camila?

- (A) Learning to trust strangers
- (B) Not having a bike
- (C) Riding uphill
- (D) The weather

3. How do we know Camila kept a record of her trip?

- (A) She wrote a book.
- (B) She talked to journalists.
- (C) She kept a video diary.
- (D) She posted on social media.

4. What does 'She's already been invited to speak at her old school' tell us?

- ☐ (A) The invitation happened before now.
- ☐ (B) She refused the invitation.
- ☐ (C) She will be invited in the future.
- ☐ (D) She hasn't been invited yet.

5. What is Camila's plan for next year?

- ☐ (A) A second trip through Central America
- ☐ (B) To stop traveling
- ☐ (C) To write a book about the Andes
- ☐ (D) To go back to the same route

1. Na sua opinião, por que a experiência de confiar em estranhos foi mais difícil para Camila do que o esforço físico? Justifique com uma frase do texto.

2. No final do texto, Camila diz: "You can be scared and still do something." O que você acha que ela quis dizer com isso?
